VIRGINIA.

Before our next issue the Virginia election will take place, and the question whether Democratic Republican government can live in the south or not, will be decided.

It is Democratic Republicanism on the one side, represented by Mahone, with bourbonism proscription intoleraance on the other, represented by the so-called Democratic party.

One side favoring a free ballot, a fair count and universal education, while the other side favoring buldozing, ballot box stuffing and keeping the masses in ignorance.

If Mahone fails, it puts the south the country will bloom and prosper, Every laboring man in this country, in and out of Virginia, is interested in Mahone's success.

The congregations of the churches all over the south should fast and pray for the success of the Mahone readjusten of Virginia. The battle is the most important of any that has ever taken place on the soil of that state.

THE CROSS. By Telegraph to the Morning Star. GALVESTON, October 31 .- An Austin special says that notwithstanding repeated inquiries, nothing further has been received regarding the alleged uprising of five hundred negroes in Milan county. It is now believed that the trouble had no existence but in the fears of the whites, occasioned by a meeting of colored people, called to discuss the recent decision of the supreme court on the civil rights bill.

It is astonishing how many negro riots there are just before an election Either Democratic imagination, or their willingness to lie, beats the world.

The poet who asked for some heavenly power to enable individuals to see themselves as others see them, solicited, unquestionably, a bitter boon, and one of doubtful ability. The heart-sickening despondency attendant upon a consciousness of the uncharitable, and frequently unjust, estimate set upon our acts and purposes by those who are not gifted with wisdom to try our hearts and views, would much oftener paralize our highest hopes and set back our resolves to amend our condition than it would assist in the work or reformation. But while this is true in the case of individuals, nothing can be more wholesome for a people in the aggregate than an opportunity to con-template themselves from the standpoint of a disinterested looker on who is not one of them. Such an advantage have we lately had, in the visit to our country of the great and justly famous Lord Chief Justice of England. By the way, we wonder if when Coleridge had for his pis a ris, at the "quite a family party." in the Boston hotel, presided over by Beast Butler, Gov. Jarvis and lady, our executive could have answered upon inquiry such questions of a genealogical character as Hood propounded of back at least twenty years. If he wins the heroine of the "Bridge of Sighs." Could our learned Governor, if asked south of the Potomac, as it has in the to day, state the relationship of John Taylor and Samuel Taylor Coleridge to his itlustrious fellow subjects pro tern of the Massachusetts Autocrat of the Breakfast Table, No. 2? But we digress. In his admirable address our Government, he reminded us that panse, but that it existed in its mighty proportions the same as now, when the savage was its undisputed lord; nor did he forget to recall our attention to the fact that semi-barbarous Russia is the mistress of still more extensive dominions. He also dwelt in appropriate terms upon the vast accumulation of wealth and its imposing consequence upon and among our people. But with the dignity of years, experience, exalted station and more exalted wisdom, he sought to urge upon all that none of the magnificent trappings of power constitute a state but men; free minded men, "as much above dull brutes indeed, in forest, brake or den, as beast themselves exceed cold rocks and brambles rude." We hope that such a lesson may not be lost upon the American people. Who is it that in this county are teaching, by precept, conduct and legisla ion, that the citizens of this county are not men? Those who deny the full rights of manhood to certain colors; those who prescribe, by flags over the doors of the "faithful." the free voters of a state, and deny to a people the right to elect their rulers. More of this anon.

Do the honest Democrats of the First N. C. District approve of the action of the Government in trying to cheat the good people of Bertie out of a representative in Congress? If they do not they should vote for Pool.

OUR FORLORN HOPE.

In the so-called First District Hon. C. C. Poole has been nominated as the opponent of Mr. Skinner. As to the personal fitness of Judge Poole for the high position to which his friends would elevate him there can be but one opinion among fair-minded and discern. ing men. A brother of the talented and accomplished Walter Poole, whose death occasioned the perplexing political imbroglio which now distracts that district, a lawyer of capacity, and of varied attainments, and a Judge of former days, whose career on the bench did no less credit to himself than to those who delighted to honor him, he would, if elected, prove himself, we doubt not, a worthy successor to him whose loss in the prime and promise of his life the good and true of all classes and parties must deplore. But, while far from desiring to discourage the gallant few who appear to have entered the lists against fate liself, we cannot scan the field of approaching combat without an irresistible foreboding that our friends have an adversary in front well nigh as unvanquishable as the Stars which fought against Sisera in their courses.

It is well known that we opposed on principle a contest in the district as defined by the Administration. We so expressed ourselves in the last issue of the Posr, and we shall not "take back" what we then had to say. But there is certainly this difference between the probable election of a Democrat and the possible election of a Republican; as the county of Bertie was unquestionably excised from the district by reason of the political complexion it was supposed to give, and Carteret added for the same cause, a Republican elected under the new apportionment, over the powerful odds arrayed against him might feel sure that he was the true exponent of local sentiment, while the Bourbon elected under the same circumstances could but realise that he represented but a manufactured majority. In other words, since the district before this act of partisan jugglery had declared itself Republican in the choice of its member of Congress, a substituted Republican member chosen in despite of such fraudulent lopping of his strength could but be regarded as the true exponent of the politics of his section, while exactly the reverse wou'd be the case as to the Bourbon member elect. For these reasons, since Judge Poole has been nominated, we hope most earnestly to see him elected. A well-fought campaigu, moreover, even though it may end in our defeat, may serve to keep our forces disciplined and compact, and prepared for the g.eat campaign of 1884. It is certainly somewhat significant and encouraging that the Boutbons deem the efforts of their most reliable orators and managers necessary to insure their vaunted majority against the sense of justice and right among a people not accustomed to be usurping executive. TWO WRONGS WRIGHTED BY THE COURTS.

The supreme court on Monday las reversed the decision of Judge Phillips in the aldermanic controversy, in the city of Raleigh.

Our readers may not remember the particulars of the case, so we will give a synopsis of it: At the spring elecdealing will vote for Charles U. Pool tion for aldermen, in Raleigh, the inon the 20th of November, in the First dependents and Republicans succeeded in electing a majority, and therefore would elect the mayor and other subordinate officers. The bourbons immedistely commenced to find some pretext to turn out some of their opponents; they finally lit upon a very shallaw excuse. Two of the Kepublicans held the positions of janitor and night watchman in the government building; so they turned them out of the board, by force, and proceeded to elect the mayor and other officers. The independents and Republicans employed Hon. D. G. Fowle, who heartily went into the case. He brought the cause before superior court Judge Phillips, who had been supposed, up to that time, to But he decided in favor of the action of the Democrats, the case was appealed to the supreme court, and or Monday last that honorable court reversed the decision of Judge Phillips, to the credit of the judiciary of North Carolina. So we suppose that the Republicans and independents will now go in and reorganize the board, as they should, and elect the officers, as the present incumbents are in by action of the policeman's billy.

The other case was the cause brough J. H. Hannen, a young colored man of high character and education, was elected Register of Deeds, by a large majority, in November last, in Halifax county. The Bourbon County Commissioners determined that he should not have the office, and they found that he had held a watchmans place in Washington, and therefore they decided that he was not a citizen of North Carolina. But Mr. Hannon appealed to the Supreme Court and it has given an opinion in his favor, so Mr. Hannon will at last get his position, and we he will not get 500 votes in the county.

We feel it a duty which we take pleasure in performing, to say that this case was also argued before Judge Phillips, who manfully gave judgment in favor of Hannon.

Hop. Daniel G. Fowle is entitled to creat praise for the able and distinguished manner in which he conducted the case for the Independents and Republicans in the Raleigh case We have heard gentlemen who heard his argument before Judge Phillips, say that it was the ablest ever delivered in the city of Raieigh. They were gentlemen who were capable of judging, and Democratic lawyers at that; this we admit, is saying a great deal. When it is recollected that such men a Badger, Graham and others have been so often heard in that city.

Justice travels slow, but it comes at ast, and we hope our Democratic bourhone of the state will take warning that a day of reckoning will overtake them sooner or later.

A Lesson in Free Trade. BY JOHN B. HOLMES.

AN ILLINOIS PIONEER

Somewhere about the year 1840 William Morden came to the state of Illinois, and settled on 160 acres of as good land as is to be found on the Illinois river. He was one of the pioneers of that region. It is here worthy of record that he had come west under the pressure of the terrible financial crisis of disfranchised at the will or whim of an 1837. He had been engaged in some small manufacturing enterprises which had been prosperous up to the time when the disastrous result of the compromise act of 1833 began to be exper'enced on account of the importations of foreign goods, which were so enormous that manufactories were forced to close, and their proprietors were ruined. Mr. Morden was one of the sufferers, and, with thousands of others, chose to fix his home in the west.

The location of Mr. Morden's farm vas on one of the bluffs that run parallel with the Illinois river, and it was just beyond the belt of wooded land that for the most part crowned the bluffs. It was no great distance from the river, and extended well out into the prairie. There was probably not a foot of waste land upon the farm, and, after the first breaking up, the soil was as rich and mellow as a garden. The house stood upon the crest of one of the land-waves which gave to the prairie "rolling" characteristics. There lay the rich soil as far as the eye could reach; not a house, not a fence, not a sign of civilization. It was, in its fertility, a very paradise of productiveness. The region abounded in game, and the Illinois river was literally alive with fish that came from the Missis sippi. The luxurant grass afforded rich pasture for all the horses, cattle, and sheep that could be attended to. Then, when the first big cornfield was planted by Morden, what a sight! It was a forest of corn of no mean maynitude, and when it came to its perfection there was promise of such a yield as in all his experience and observation in the old state of New York he had never known. Mr. Morden's eyes fairly sparkied as he looked over his cornfield and his broad acres, and saw to magination the mine of wealth that awaited only the plastic hand of tilage. He had planted in full faith that such a bountiful growth could not do otherwise than bring a handsome return for

But there were some serious draw backs to the realization of this idea There were no fences, and everybody's cattle and swine roamed in everybody's cornfields. There, for instance, was Bromb-au-old Pete Brombeau as he was called-whose farm was well nigh so that his farm was in reality thor oughly protected against the incursions of neighboring cattle. He had lived on his place for several years, and car ried on a large business in stock raising, teaming, and trade generally. The key-note of his success was to centre on his own place the entire profits of agricultural manufacture, to the manifest detriment of those who sup plied the raw material.

He had a hundred swine and half s undred head of cattle and horses. Once in a while they would take a circuit through Morden's cornfield, and gorge themselves. Morden mildly remonstrated with Brombean.

"Poob!" says Brombeau, in reply this is a free country-no restrictions here. We're like the fish in the Illi nois river-the big ones swallow the little ours."

The application of this philosophy to civilization was new to Mr. Morden, and, after due reflection, he concluded to discard it in practice as he had ever done in theory.

"Free country-no restrictions;" thought he, "it seems to me that that idea of freedom savors of barbarism." He had more than once wondered why there was so little restraint of law and why the doctrine of might, in this m tter of flecks and herds, carried so successfully its high-h uded course against the doctrine of right: In the case of Brombeau, might was somewhat personified. He had larger herds and flocks that he had the reputation of ever looked so thrifty and promising. owning, and, although he possessed a farm no larger than that of Mr. Mornen, yet his herds roamed over bundreds of farms that stood to him in the light of colonial dependencies. These farms produced the "raw material," in the shape of corn, grass, and other products of a purely agricultural community. And how did Brombeau utilize these colonial farms?

In this way; He would fit out a fleet of several hundreds of cattle, horses, and sheep. The horses would represent the fast shipe; among the cattle there would be a goodly number of bulls to do battle, if necessary, against opposing forces. The sheep would be on hand to rush in on muse and lay low a wheatfield in a single hour. Woe to that farmer whom Brombeau west against with his whole force. Say it was farmer Workman who had planted, and expected to harvest, twenty acres of corn or ten acres of myself, I can my that your cost wheat. Now, when they are just ready been very detrimental to my profor the sickle, Brombeau gets his forces together. Farmer Workman is saleep, and the coast is clear. On rush the whole herd. They make ferce on-slaught on the cornfield; the sheep de-yastate the wheatfield; the swine go for the potatoes and fruit, and in a liittle time the whole season's work is tram-pled in the mud; and the herd, having taken in all the raw material they can carry, set their prows for home. This operation was carried on against some-body almost every day in the year; thus it was that Brombeau's farm became a great manufacturing point for beef, pork, and poultry. The raw material was seized and brought home by these four-legged freebooters—some-thing as Great Britain has, for two hundred years, been accustomed to do with the products of Ireland, of India, of China, and as she has tried over and over again to do with those of the United States.

Workman called on Brombeau, and mildly remonstrated against such proceedings.
"Pooh!" says Brombeau, "I can sel you beef and pork cheaper than you can raise them. You see it don't cost me anything to speak for the material." Workman could never quite under-stand the thing; and when he tried to raise cattle and horses and swine they would be mysteriously poisoned or stolen, and such ill luck attended his attempts that he gave it up in despair, and wilted down into a mere producer of raw material, most of which was either seized as shore or was sold to Brombeau at such prices as he cause to

But in Mr. Morden Brombeau found another surt of person to deal with. His herd destroyed one crop for Morden, who then went to Brombeau and remostrated with him on this lawless way of acquiring wealth.

o restrictions here. "And do you think it just that you should forage on my wneatheld and cornfield for the fattening of your beef and pork?" "But look you," answers Brombeau, "at how cheap a rate I can furnish you beef, pork and wool. You must admit that that is some advantage. You can not compete with me, because my raw material costs me very little; my flag —so to speak -floats upou every wave of the prairie. There is not an acre of land within a dozen miles of here that does not pay tribute to me through my flocks and herds."

Mr. Modern went home with such effections as these:

"Brombeau's system is evidently designed for Brombeau's benefit and not for mine. Now, suppose I devise a system that shall be adapted to my needs, and that will, at the same time minister to the general prosperity? He looked over the situation. There was his corofield half gaten up by Brombeau's herd: there was his wheatfield, dato; there was an infint orchard of one hundred trees that had annually been browsed down by Brombeau's cattle; there were a dozen currant bushes that Brombeau's sheep had gnawed nearly to the roots; there were sundry other kinds or fruit that all had paid tribute to Brombeau's system of political economy. In fact, Brom-beau's was the workshop of the county, and everybody paid tribute to it.

Mr. Modern had not read Stuar Mill, ner J. B. Say, nor Frederick Bas-tlat; but he read the necessities of his around his cornfield; in like manner he inclosed his wheatfield. All this was attended with great labor and no small expenditure; but at last all was completed in time for the spring crops, and so thoroughly had it been done that Brombeau was taken by surprise when he heard of it.

"What!" he cries, "does Morden dare to infringe upon the time-he tem that I have adopted? What has the presumtuous fellow done.

"He has fenced his infant orchard-'Protection!' He has enclosed his confield—'A tariff on corn!' He has fenced his wheatfield—'A tax upon

As soon as the warm spring rains opened the earth, the effects of this Protection, this tariff, this tax, were wonderful to behold. The infant orchard at first started slowly, whether from the remembrance of past experiences or from a dread of the future is uncertain; at any rate, the buds swelled carefully and cautiously, as if in doubt whether to open out; but the longing desire to see the sunlight brought them out at last, and when they saw the strong high fence about them there was a smile all over the orchard, and the apple trees nodded to each other in oken of the utmost satisfaction. When Mr. Morden came among the trees he found them arrayed in the most beau-tiful blossoms, and completely filling the air with their fragrance. The corn was planted in the newly-fenced field. and never did corn sprout so soon after being planted. Pumpkin seeds sprouted in a few hours, and the young plants grew with astonishing rapidity; the vines ran recklessly among the corn until they came to the fence, where they would stop, and a pumpkin would commence growing where it could look through the fence and tantalize Brom beau's herd of swine. No wheatfield When the news of these doings was carried to Brombean he ground his teeth with rage. With the tact of a political wire puller, he said within himself: "I'll go to Morden and show him what a fool he is."

He first prepared a statement show-ing how cheap he could produce beef. pork, poultry, and how cheap he could sell apples and such things as Mordes had protected. So he presented irimself to Morden who was very much surprised. "I have come," says Brombe see whether we cannot amicably co "Compromise our diservation orden, "I assure you, Mr. Bro

"That," says Brombeau, "is just two bundred dollars added to the cost of your wheat. It is two hundred dollars tax upon it. Why not buy your wheat of me at a price less by two hundred dollars than the cost of your wheat, and save yourself from the enhanced "Really," says Modern, "this looks lausible upon its face."

"It is not only plausible, but it is should have had more had not the cattle and hogs nearly destroyed my Better if they had done so," rays Brombeau, "What did that fence abou your orchard cost you?"

"One hundred dollars."

"Well, look you, Morden, those aples cost you, labor and all, fully twenly dollars a tusher, and I sell you a better quality of fruit for a dollar a "I-I-know, it's expensive; but I

"Well; I'll think about it " This was the most that Brombeau could exact from Morden, and he went

"The first fruits of Protection!" said Morden, after Brombeau had gone. 'He respects and fears my position of ndependence of him,"

Yet Morden was somewhat troubled with Brombeau's presentation of affairs. He had not figured the thing out after the manner of a Free Trade political economist, and the result, when so presented to him, surprised him, and for a moment upset his purposes. But he slept over it. Next morning he talked with his wife about it. They went out together, and look ed at the orchard. How beautiful and

Morden. "Why, Brombeau's. He says he can sell us a better quality of apples for a dollar a bushel." "But, if our crope are caten by his cattle, where are we to get the dollar o pay for the bushel of apples." With a bountiful harvest wheat, of corn and of other products, we could easier pay high prices than we could low prices and have nothing with which to pay them. I do not like Brombeau's no tion; it is supremely selfih."

The result of all this .was that Mr Mrden resolved that he would adhere to his Protection policy.

11 A GRAND FREETRADE MOVEMENT. As soon as Brombeau learned of Morden's decision, he determined to crush effectively and forever his protective notions. He called together his men servants, his maid servants his oxen, and his asses, and presented to them the innovation that Morde was making upon their time-honored custom. The arguments that Brombeau presented thrilled his audience to the very stomach perve, and it was unani mously resolved that Morden's system must be broken down at all hazards. "What business has Morden to raise applee?" cried Brombe iu, in an eloquent peroration. "What business has Morden to manufacture beef, pork and butter? Let Morden raise corn and wheat, and we won't trouble him to draw it to market-we'll take it off his hands at his very door. We must kill these infant enterprises in their very cradles, if we would keep to ourselve the monopoly. All this was assented to, and it was resolved to take active measures immedistely; for Morden's corn was getting to be good feeding for cattle, the wheat field was becoming rank with uninterrupted growth, and the orchard and the current bushes were laden with people whom Morden employed about his farm. And this was partially successful—just enough so to put him on his guard. This bribing was developed in very curious manner. One morning hr. Mordon was awakened by a frightful clamor. When he emerged from his house a remarkable sight met his gaze. His cattle, horses, sheep, swine, and poultry were ranged in the lane that led to the barn. A venerable horse had a card pasted to his side, on which "Oats taxed 100 per cent." huge hog bore a banner, "pork taxed 300 per cent," and so on through the list of Mr. Morden's farm productions. But the most ludicrous performance of all was that of a jackass. He was nearly covered with a blanket sheet of coarre paper, on which could be read something like this: A jackass in the morning rises from his bed of straw, taxed 100 per cent: put his head in a manger, taxed 50 per cent; finds some cornstalks, taxed 35 per cent; goes for a bag of oats, taxed 100 per cent, and, having filled himself, wallks to a water-ing trough, taxed 75 per cent; drinks ster pumped with a pump taxed % per cent; sees a barrel of wheat, taxed to per cent, eats his fill, immediately begins to swell, and keeps on swellin until he bursts; then lies down under the shadow of a wheat stack, tax per cent, and then goes where there are

It has, in fact, robbed me of the no taxes or tariffs on corn, oats, or

Now, who can fail to to see that this jackass meets his death from taxation jackass meets his death from taxation; for, as we have shown, had it not been for the fences, for the labor, for the skill that all went to promote the growth of the corn and wheat, and enhance their cost, they would not have been grown, and the jackass could never have died of taxation?

"One of Brombeau's tricks!" cried Morden, as he called his wife to look at the ludicrous array. The whole herd except the jackass, seemed to be heartily ashamed of their role. The hog slunk away and got out of sight behind the corn-crib, the horse tore his card off and trampled it in the dirt, while the sheep made excuse that they had had the wool pulled over their Point the First .- Brown's IRON BIT-TERS is not an intoxicating compound. It is a tonic medicine, not a drink. It is a skillfully compounded preparation made to restore strength and health; not a beverage to be sold in bar-rooms and tayerns.

Point the Second, -BROWN'S IRON BITTERS is free from everything injurious. The most delicate ladies and the most enfeebled infants may use it remedial agency, it is gentle in its operation, restoring wasted strength and imparting robust health in the most eficient manner.

Point the Third .- BROWR'S IRON BIT-TERS is made by the Brown Chemical ished house, whose reputation is wellknown to the business world and the general community. There is no risk in buying such a medicine.

|For the Wilmington Post.] A Boom for the Fair.

OCTOBER, 30th, 1883. MR. EDITOR:-On Wednesday last we took the cars in company with Mr. W. G. Pearson to make a flying visit through the west, in the interest of the approaching exhibition of the Colored Industrial Association. In a short while we found ourselves rambling through the streets of Durham, solicit ing donations and premiums for the fair. Much interest was awakened and several contributed, and others promised to put specimens of their work.

manship on exhibition. Among those whom we met we espe ored tobacco dealer. L'e is a very thrifty young man, and stands very prominent as a business man. He gave us a mite, and assisted us much in the work. The following evening we made our way to Greensboro, and there we spent Sunday last, blew down a number of nearly two days, laboring very hard Friday was spent seeking aid, and, although an advance agent had canvassed this town, still our friends contributed quite liberally. Through the kindness of Mr. Woodard and Mr. Yancey the court house had been se cured for us to meet the people, and to explain the merits of our enterprise Notwithstanding the many other meetings which were held on that night, we had a respectable audience. After giving them "the best in our shop," many came forward and gave us something, and assured us that they would attend the fair.

At ten o'clock the succeeding day we mounted the cars for Winston. The afternoon was spent by us strolling the streets of this progressive town, drumming up a crowd for the speaking which was to take place that night. Our talested young friend, Mr. C. R. Moore, rendered very valuable assistance in securing a suitable place for the speaking. The court house was the last bell a very fine audience of mon gathered. The speaking began, and when the meeting had almost reached alarm sounded forth an appeal for all to come hastily and help extinguish a burning building. When this distress ing sound was heard, nearly every man sprang from his seat, and rushed to wards the place of the fire. The fire being small was soon extinguished, but our assembly having dispersed, could not then be gathered again. We let this place totally dissatisfied, not with standing many promised to visit the Fair. Monday, the 29th, we special will come. On the evening of the 29 h. we were expected to speak at Concord. So we wended our way to this pencefu: northeen for the inclemency of the weather, however, we had present about as many as we could reasons

Quite a number of articles will be placed on exhibition from this place Mr. Coleman has four time cream-colored horses of the "Indian King" breed size to the present factory. which be expects to bring down. These horses would make a creditable display in any Fair. To-night we shall bold a meeting in High Point, and to morrow trip so far has been successful, and many have been influenced to attend C. S.
